There is no doubt that the evil of drunkenness amony men and officers has cost us millions of treasure and the loss of many lives. Could we but trace to the true source the misadventures and disgraces that have wrought harm to the cause of the Union since the was began, the damning influence of intemperance would be seen to underlie them since the was began, the damning influence of Intemperance would be seen to underlie them in multifudes of cases. To stem the tide of this evil, and availing themselves of the eagerness of our soldiers and sallors for reading, to while away the essus of camp and deck, the American Temperance Union is issuing a series of admirable tracts, expressly for the Army and Navy. The following is an synopsis of McClellan's we should have had Richmond in a week after joining him on the Peninsula, brought a verbal message from McDowell, expressing his wish President, Secretary Stanton and McClellan, showing that he (McDowell) acted under orders in not moving to the support of McCiel-lan. Among them was a telegram of date, May 25th, by President Lincoln to McDowell, instructing him to by saide the movement on Eichmond to co-operate with Fremont in the destruction of Ewell and Jackson. A telegram of the same date, from McDowell to the Precident, says that his order had been obey-ed, but that it was a crushing blow to him. A telegram of the same date, from the Presi-dent to McDowell, expressing himself highly gratified with the alscrity with which he had obeyed his order, and saying that it was as painful to him as to McDowell. A tele-egram of the same date from McDowell egram of the same date from McDowell to the President says that his order would be carried out with all energy, but pointing out the impossibility of effecting the purpose proposed; that he could effect nothing in the direction in which he was be-ing sent, and that he would lose much; and that by the movement all our armies would be paralyzed from Richmond to the Sheman-doch.

The examination of McClellan was resum ed. When questioned as to his knowledge of the habits of McDowell as to the use of into lesting liquors, witness said he had known McDowell for nearly twenty years, and had known him as abstelning entirely from the use of wine or any spirituous liquors, and even tea or confee—that was his reputation amongst all who knew him. Witness could imagine nothing more absurd than the charge. McDowell stated here that he was through McDowell stated nere that he was savings with the witness.

The Western Virginia admission went through to-day by a stronger vote than was expected—forty-one majority. The chief objection to the admission grew out of fear that the precedent was a bad one. It is admitted on all hands the proceedings was somewhat irregular and revolutionary in the outset; but it is believed that admitting the reorganizait is believed that admitting the reorganiza-tion of the State government of Virginia to be legal, proceedings for the reorganization of the new State cannot be irregular. The Presi-dent has written a letter to Horatio Seymour urging him to drop attention to party in-terests, and to concern himself somewhat for the interests of the nation, dwelling on the sufferings of the West from the closing of the Misalssipa Ever. and expressing the hoose superings of the West from the closing of the Mississippi Eirer, and expressing the hope that New York will be able to alleviate that sufforing somewhat he suffering somewhat by preventing railroad monopolies, and reducing the present enor-mous tariff on freight As desired by those who ought to know, it appears to be a somewhat Matters now look as if Burnside was walt-ing for reinforcements. It would seem that the effect of the movement now in progress must be to break the quiet on the Rappahannock, before winter sets fairly in at any rate.

The debate in the House on Western Virginia crowded out some radical anti-adminisfered if the regular order of business had been followed.

The President said a day or two ago that the whole energies of the government were now devoted to opening the Mississippi River. This declaration, in connection with a doubt about the object of the recent expedition, it is thought may be significant.

It is said, on good suthority, that the only real-rival of Jadge Holt for Smith's place in the Cabinet, is Browning of Illinoia. That gentleman's course in the Senate is at season was supposed to have placed him beyond the possibility of a recommendation of the administration, but Browning is an old personal friend, and Mr. Lincoln, in the kindness of his heart, wants to do something for him. It is not believed that he will allow his personal feelings to lead him to so suicided an act of the appointment of Prowning would be.

Green then proceeds to describe divers and sundry meetings with the Secretary of War, with the entire Cabinet, then with the President, again with the Cabinet, and so on alternately for a whole week he associated exclusively with Cabinet Ministers and Presidents, and in his presence they discussed the grave questions of peace and war, in which Green took a leading part? Then it was too rigorous and prevented the export of ecotton and the import of fabries. It his not the lawful object of a blockade? Then it was alleged that the closing of the cotton ports by the blockade was confinued too long. We opened them to trade and invited it; the insurgents refuse to let cotton be sent forward to market. We apply all our means and energies, confessedly greater than sny nation ever before applied, to suppress insurrection and restore the freedom of our inland and foreign commerce, and we gain victory after victory; by this does not satisfy our sennies abroad. Defeats in their eyes prove our national incapacity. Victories won in conformity with the most humane practices of war, are steaded with such destruction of life as to shock and confound their sensibilities. Complaints against an increase of duties on foreign merchandise, and against the rigor of our taxation, come upon us in the very same breath with representations that our engagements will never be fulfilled, and our hone, and propositions set forth, it is also true by the same authority, that he did it to prevent the Pro-clemation from "radsing he—I withthe rebels," and in the hopes that if they were rejected by our Government that the tories and traitors in the North would rush to his resear to prevent the enforcement of that decree of Liv-vent, Aiready the "howling" has com-menced, as requested, but it will not stay the hand of the President. No one knows how slavery was engrafted upon the nation when it was epringing up into existence; how it has grown and galance strength as the nation likelf has advanced in wealth and power; how fearful the people have hitherto been of any change which might disturb the parasite, will contend that the or-

On the one clation of the two countries as an official exposition of the policy of the Government; and it his view it was scarcely necessary for me te say how much it would tend to increase the irritation already very great there. On the other, it was having a great effect in concentrating the popular inclination in this kingdon which was awaying every day more and mornafavorably to us. I regretted to be obliged to confess that from the day of my arrival. I has observed a regular and steady decline of goo will toward the United States. Lord Lyon had been to see me in the morning. Whill we had united in deploring the respective ten dencies on the two edes, we had also joine

But he could not say what circumstances might happen from month to month in the future.

SEWARD IN REPLY TO THE ABOVE. On Nov. 4th Mr. Seward replied as follows

On Nov. 4th Mr. Seward replied as follows to the foregoing:

It is not pleasant to a loyal American to see a European cabinet discussing before a European cabinet discussing before a European people the question whether they will continue to recognize the existence of this Republic. But this is a part of the painful experience of the evil times upon which we have failed by the continue to recognize the existence of the and among ourselves to invite foreign nations to intervene, we have no right to expect these mations to finder use candidly, much less to judge us kindly or wisely. It would be above all things, unreasomable to expect anche charisable judgments from political parties in foreign countries intent only on the objects of their own ambition. Fortunately we have the right to be free, independent, and at peace, whether European political parties wish in as or not. I think, also, we have the power to be so. While European parties, seconding to your representation, are even more healfle to our constry new than swer before, it is on the other hand, a source of much astisfaction to Enov that this same control than it has been at any former period, and that if any additional motive were necessary to sustain its resolution to remain united, independent, and sourceden, that motive would be found in the thereentied on a foreign fished in the great and sourceden, that motive would be found in the theorem of the political fortune makes rapid.

and painful demestic transactions in which it is engaged.

The whoel of political fortune makes rapid revolutions. It is less than three years since all Great Britain manifested itself desirous of the friendship of the United States. A similar desire may before the lapse of a long period, occur again. Neither politicians or statesmen control events. They can moderate them and accommodate their ambitions to them, but they can do no more.

While New York and Brooklyn were enjoying the ceremonies attending the launch of the Kookk and Caskill Jersey City was awakened by the roar of steam from the Weehawken which was launched at Hoboken some weeks slace. The guns having strived for the turret, the greater part of the Iron work being finished and the machinery completed, steam was applied to the engine which began to es work elegantly. Mr. Birkbeck, the superintendent, witnessed their initiatory motions, and was highly pleased. The engines easily made fifty revolutions a minute, without an attempt to test their maximum capacity.

Polk's corps is at Murfreesboro and Hardee and Kirby Smith are at Shelby-ville. The organization of the rebel army as I sent it to you some time ago, is very nearly correct; but the figures were over estimates. The best informed officers here put their available force at 60,000. This I think is very near the force of the whole army of the three corps—ten divisions, and the cavalry. I understand that information has been received at head quarters to the effect that transportation for 38,000 men was issued at Chattanooga, This was exclusive of the corps of Kirby Smith and Breckinrige's division. The figures must therefore include we corring to this, would be 19,000 strong. If we estimate Kirby Smith's at 15,000, and Breckinridge's at 7,000, it will make the rebel-force past 00,000 strong. arms continued to be in their new depositories.

Mr. Buchanan mixes up—perhaps I ought rather to say scene to confound—quite a different class of arms with the foregoing, vis: the quotas of arms distributed among the soveral States under the annual appropriations towards arming the whole body of the militia of the Union. Thus he says, "The Southern States received in 1280 less instead of more them the quotas of arms to which they were entitled by law." This is most strange, contrasted with information given to an last year, with and a telegram just received from Washington and a high officer—act of the Ordinance Bureau—in these words and figar." "Rhode Island, Delawars, and Texas had not drawn at the end of eighteen sixty (1890) their annual quotas of arms for that year, and Massachmests, Tenneusce and Kentúcky only in part; Virginia, South Carolina, Georgis, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and Kanasa were, by the order of the Secretary of War, supplied with their quotas for eighteen sixty-one (1861) in advance, and Pennsylvania-sand Maryland in part."

This adsence of arms to eight Southern States is apufficient commentary by itself on the transfer, about the same time, of the 118,000 muskets and rifles.

In respect to the heavy cannon ordered from Pittaburg to the gulf of Mexico, Mr. Buchanan has shown me that I was in error in saying that their shipment was countermanded in March instead of January, 1861.

This was the only immaterial part of my statement, for I was correct in the declarations that I gave information to Mr. Secretary Holt that the shipment had commenced, and that he ordered the guns to be re-landed, and stopped the robber; Winffinia Scort.

heart, that he carried with him wherever he west.

A soldier is commonly a fough fellow. He leads a rough life. He has a great many rough things to try him. It does not help a man, to be away from his home, his mother and sisters, or wife and children. It hurts him. He grows coarse under it, and carcless. He says things that he would be ashamed to let a woman hear him say, because there is no woman about. Still, I believe a great many soldiers are like a September chestnut. The outside is hard, and sharp, and shut up, but the inside is soft, and weee, and good.

Well, now, my friend, I do hope you will get strong and well, and go back to that dear old place again when this war is over. I tell
